The tirigin of Christman.

The custom of Christman gifts grew out of a very old religious rite. When it was the custom of having a shrine in most every house and at given points about the highwaps, it was customary on Christman morning to leave upon the shrines sums of minuer for the poor, loquets and written benealtchots. Travelers prized the latter and the poor were grateful for the former. The bounds and tritles were tenderly regarded by those to whom they were given after having served as votire offerings to some saint. Then there was somethings as access about them that they were unityes carelessly and unmeaningly, and they were prized accordingly. Intrinsic value was sanced both them that they were unityes as a trifling trinket was prized justas highly as a gem.
